

Acknowledgments

Embarking on a journey towards a doctoral degree is intellectually stimulating, academically challenging and at times bewilderingly frustrating. Accomplishing this onerous journey by hitching a ride on the shoulders of wise men that have traversed this path has been invaluable. Their counsel has been akin to lighthouses for ships providing solace and direction. In order to avoid drawing any inferences about their contribution and erudition, they are acknowledged in alphabetical order of their first names.

Aptly, the first person to be acknowledged is Dr. Ankush Mittal who was responsible for germinating the idea of taking up research in eLearning and specifically exploring the potential of publicly available resources. The best tribute to his contribution is envisioned by fact that the topic kept me constantly engrossed, was novel, extremely challenging and created a life-long interest in the domain.

Next is Karma Yogi Prof. Kamal Ghanshala, Chancellor of Graphic Era Hill University who is an institution by himself. The sheer audacity of his dreams and achievements despite all odds is an inspiration to one and all. The world-class academic ecosystem designed by him is a Mecca for academic pursuits and in no small measure contributed to the successful outcome.

Dr. R C Joshi the Chancellor of Graphic Era Deemed University owes a special mention. His genuine love for academics, cheerfully sharing his vast experience, giving me his valuable time often at short notices and educating me in on doing a Ph.D. and most importantly the right way are invaluable life lessons. I shall forever remain indebted to him.

My research advisor Prof. Sanjay Jasola is a man of wide experience and sense of duty with purpose. He was instrumental in keeping me focused and on track. His most invaluable advice is the development of good communication skills as a byproduct of a Ph.D. program. I owe a tremendous amount of gratitude for all his time, guidance and direction.

Often the research support goes unacknowledged. I consider it my good fortune to be provided with an excellent ecosystem in GEHU for undertaking the research and would like to convey my heartfelt appreciation especially to the DPMC members for conducting the reviews regularly, rigorously, meticulously, and motivating me to step up to challenges presented. Their valuable insights and constructive criticisms during the meetings have contributed immensely to the betterment of the research.

A note of appreciation is also due to the Principal, management, and staff of Mata Amrita Vidyalayam, Belagavi for according the permission to conduct user trials at their school. The school was kind enough to extend support in all manners for the conduct of the user trials.

Lastly, but not in any way less I owe a ton to my fantastic colleagues at Graphic Era and my family for their constant support and invariant words of encouragement. My children never believed it is ever going to get over. Finally, I can let them know it is done!
