ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

When we fall from the stars to the bellies of
Our mothers / ... don'tcha think
We tumble thru a niggah
Night / etchin light
Thru them black holes....

This work embodies the unseen hands and hearts, the hopes and dreams of those who love me. This work is dedicated to them.

First among equals are those who nurtured me into wholeness, “etchin’ light thru them black holes.”

My mother, for teaching me to love God and myself and my father for giving me the best that life had to offer.

My husband Bernard, for his love, generosity, patience and courage in giving me “the space to be” and the freedom to explore “endless possibilities”.

My daughter Tamara, for her infinite good sense and whose laughter reaches my soul.

My guide, Dr. Sarala Krishnamurthy for being such an inspiration; for allowing me to help myself from the precious resources of her scholarship, generosity and time and most importantly for the bond of shared experiences and the gift of friendship.

This is also in gratitude to those who ‘unknowingly’ brought this work to birth.
Dr. Somashekar, ex-Principal, Women’s Christian College, who told me “don’t stop your reading”. I didn’t.

Mrs. Rita Cherian, Department of English, Women’s Christian College who whetted my appetite for literary research and scholarship in her classes.

The Sisters of St. Joseph of Tarbes and the Department of English, Jyoti Nivas College for their influence and role in my professional and personal development.

Kala and Shanmugam for typing, photocopying and making my work, theirs.

The Herefords and Michaels, my brother Jonathan and Uncle Fred for their prayerful support.

And above all, this is my tribute to God for grace abounding.
